Fifteen Hundred March Against Police Brutality Ends Peacefully

By Guy Leonard and Bri Corley
Staff Writer and Contributing Writer

A march organized by local young people protesting the violent death of Minneapolis man George Floyd at the hands of a white police officer, the third such event in St. Mary’s in one week, went peacefully the evening of June 5.

The protest also drew the same size crowd to the greens in front of the Potomac Building at the county governmental center as the prior one June 3.

The approximately 1,500 demonstrators, according to sheriff’s office estimates rallied at 7 p.m. and marched down Hollywood Road towards the intersection with Route 5 in a massive procession, necessitating traffic routes being blocked by local law enforcement.

The gathering was a diverse mix of races, creeds and ages.

Despite warnings from the health department about exposure to coronavirus, there was virtually no social distancing during the rally or the march.

Weston Kilgore, 17, said rallying and marching for a good cause was worth the risk.

“I think injustice and police brutality have gone on too long,” Kilgore told The County Times. “Everyone was there for the same reason.

“Everyone decided this was more important to speak up against all the bad things that are going on rather than stay safe from coronavirus.”

But he disagreed with some of his friends that all police were bad.

“I have a hard time agreeing with that,” Kilgore said. “There are a lot of cops out there, it’s impossible for all cops to be bad.”

And the riots, which have led to civilian and law enforcement deaths around the nation, were counterproductive.

“The riots are distracting from the message,” Kilgore said. “If they really want change, they should protest peacefully, that’s a better message.”

Sheriff Timothy K. Cameron, who spoke at the event, said in a later interview he would take part in a virtual public meeting later this month to discuss concerns about local policing.

Cameron said he believed that relations between his agency and the public were strong.

“But it matters less what I think than what the community thinks,” Cameron told The County Times. “The discussion on [police] reform is a good and positive one.”

President of the St. Mary’s County branch of the NAACP William “BJ” Hall said coming out to the protest was not only a matter of supporting the Black Lives Matter movement but also acknowledging racial inequality within St. Mary’s county.

“There’s so many different things we need to address here,” said Hall. “We need to understand that so many African Americans are facing housing issues, healthcare access issues, education issues like the technology gap we were impacted by once the coronavirus hit and everyone had to go to remote learning. There are tons of ways we are impacted by racial inequality and I just want to make sure that we all have the same access to opportunity.”

Hall said the St Mary’s County NAACP was working alongside police to reduce tensions between the black community and the police force.

“Right now, we are working with the sheriff and the state’s attorney and reviewing policies and procedures to make sure that there is nothing there that would put someone in jeopardy of possibly losing their life as George Floyd did,” said Hall. “Even if it does unfortunately happen, what we want to do is make sure the law is set up in a way that would prosecute that person to the fullest extent of the law.”

In a later interview, Hall said the NAACP-sponsored virtual panel would be live-streamed June 25 on the local chapter’s Facebook page.

Hall praised the sheriff’s office in general for being fair and equitable in its operations.

“We have leadership in place who are willing to address issues once identified,” Hall said, with some caveats. “I can’t confirm we truly have an issue with racial profiling, but I have heard concerns.

“I haven’t heard any [official] complaints of police brutality.”

Hall said his other major concern with law enforcement locally was what he called over policing.

“The police presence is densest where the minority population is densest,” Hall said.

St. Mary’s County sheriff’s deputy Cpt. David Yingling echoed this sentiment, saying that the discussion of police brutality and ethics “never ceases” within the agency.

“Since Sheriff Cameron has taken office, we constantly evaluate, learn, train, and respond to what’s going on in the world,” said Cpt. Yingling. “We wholeheartedly believe in holding the officers accountable for their actions and training officers to respond and deescalate situations...We monitor what is going on but I wouldn’t say that’s the catalyst that has us changing, we are always striving to be a leading-edge in a world-class agency.”

Emmanuel Wright, one of the organizers of the event, and a Leonardtown High School graduate, said he struggled while growing up with a mixed white and black racial lineage but realized he should not be ashamed of having African heritage.

He also rallied against statements such as “Blue Lives Matter,” which advocated for the lives of police officers have risen up at times against the “Black Lives Matter” mantra.

“Blue lives don’t matter because blue is not a skin color,” Wright said. “They can take their uniform off, but I can’t take the black out of my skin.”

Mary Maday Slade, Leonardtown town council member, also marched in the procession.

She was impressed by its peaceful, yet powerful, presence and by those who organized it.

“I admire an 18-year-old who can get up there and speak from the heart,” Slade said. “I don’t think I could have organized something like this when I was there age.

“It was a positive message that included everybody.”

Hutchins Calls for Review of Protest

By Dick Myers
Editor

Calvert County Commissioner and former Maryland State Police superintendent Tim Hutchins has called for a review of the demonstration in Prince Frederick on June 1 that ended in tear gas and arrests.

Hutchins said, “We went through a very difficult time with COVID-19, now compounded by the events that have taken place since George Floyd’s death. This is not a new pheomenon; it dates back easily to 1991 when Rodney King was the case. He quoted what King said: “Can’t we all get along?”

Hutchins during the time set aside for commissioner comments at the June 9 meeting, said, “We as a coun-yty government have a responsibil-yty to look at our actions, not ask people necessarily (about) their actions, but to look internally and ask ourselves, what could we do differently? What can we do better to that end? I’ve discussed with the county administrator an ‘after action review.’

Hutchins regarding the June 1
March, a look needs to be taken at the preparations “from our part. How did we prepare for it, to look at what occurred and to look at what were the lessons learned? What are the recommendations that we as a county government can look to do implement?”

Hutchins went on to say: “We have partners in this. Obviously, the biggest partner is in law enforcement and two law enforcement agencies,” the state police and sheriff’s office.

“I’ve gotten many emails about that,” said Hutchins regarding the June 1

preparations “from our part. How did
we prepare for it, to look at what occurred and to look at what were the
lessons learned? What are the recommendations that we as a county government can look to do implement?”

Hutchins said, “It’s different sitting here today after the actions and activities that we’ve seen in this country in the last two weeks. We all live in our own little worlds. It informs who we are, our perceptions. I can’t sit here today and completely understand how any-body’s life has been formed and do the things that they’ve done and witnessed. But I do know this world is not perfect. We always need to work to improve our have.”

Hance said, “When I hear comments from leaders of organizations that want to abolish police and get rid of jails and prisons, I have a hard time comprehending a world without law and order.”

Hance added, “We need to work to make sure that we improve and that we have law and order, and its citizens rights and civil liberties are being protected. It’s a difficult time. I don’t ever remember a protest in Calvert County.”

Commissioner Mike Hart oberved that things have changed in Calvert since he was growing up, but it still is a small town. He said, “If you really look at it, we all still go to school together, grocery stores, play ball. The reason we haven’t had a lot of the problems as the rest of the country and world is because we are friends. We are family. We do talk to each other.”

Hart observed, “You can only control what you personally can control.”
He added, “I’m nobody to give any sermons, but really it’s as basic as just treating each other how you want to be treated yourself.”

Hogan: Indoor Dining at Restaurants Resumes Friday

By Guy Leonard
Staff Writer

Starting June 12 at 5 p.m., Hogan said facilities such as gyms and dance and martial arts studios would be allowed to reopen at 50 percent capacity.

Casinos, arcades and shopping malls would also be allowed to begin reopening, Hogan said.

Schools Superintendent Dr. Karen Salmon said that schools can bring in small groups for summer school programs.

The focus in these programs, she said, should be on students who have fallen behind the most and have not performed well or have lacked the resources to take part in distance learning.

Non-public special education schools can also begin to reopen, she said, for students with learning disabilities in small groups.

“The virus is still out there,” Hogan said. “This battle is not over.”

The superintendent said the state had served vast amounts of food to needy students since the pandemic began.

“All childcare facilities can also reopen,” Salmon said, noting that summer meal programs apply to summer school programs, Salmon said.

Commissioners Adopt FY ’21 Budget

Deputies Added

By Dick Myers
Editor

The Calvert County Board of County Commissioners (BOCC) has adopted a $318,494,190 budget for the fiscal year that begins July 1. The budget adopted at the June 9 BOCC meeting includes a slight property tax rate reduction that will collectively save taxpayers $600,000.

The proposed budget as presented to the BOCC by Director of Finance and Budget Tim Hayden included a slightly less than $1 million surplus intended as somewhat of a buffer for potential fiscal fallout from the coronavirus pandemic. But before the discussion concluded and the formal vote had been taken, that surplus had dwindled by $340,000 to cover the cost of four additional court security special deputies. Calvert County Circuit Court Administrative Judge Mark Chandlee ad Sheriff Mike Evans made the plea for the extra court security.

Judge Chandlee noted the challenges of running the court during the pandemic, with trials postponed and much being done virtually or telephonically. The courts instituted the second phase of the reopening this week, but Judge Chandlee said the plans are for a full reopening with jury trials not until October. The judge said with the appointment of two additional circuit court judges earlier this year along with a magistrate, the court system was already putting stress on security even prior to the pandemic. As the courtrooms reopen, there will be additional social distancing required, he said, and that will necessitate two deputies for each courtroom in use.

Chandlee said he is making accommodations to reduce the number of people in the courthouse at any one time. He said he will be going from two scheduled court dockets to four daily to stagger the flow.

Really all of this is subject to change,” he noted about the phased reopening of the courts, because the predicted second wave could occur.

Judge Chandlee said they are also using technology to reduce the backlog of cases, but when jury trials are reinstated, things will be getting especially busy. He said social distancing for the jurors may require them to be held at a remote location and escorted to the courthouse, requiring extra deputies.

The four special deputies were part of Sheriff Evans original budget request, but the BOICC eliminated most new hires from the budget. Evans said all of his requests were warranted, “But I will stand by this one,” he said of the extra court security.

Pressed by Commissioner Buddy Hance, the sheriff said they were his No. 1 priority “at this time.”

Evans said the contract special deputies cost about half what sworn deputies do, in part because they don’t require cars and computers. He said he uses retired police officers and said he had several interested in the job. He said it would take about two months to complete the hiring process, in time for the return of the jury to the courthouse.

Evans said he had to provide court security and may be forced to press deputies into overtime situations to fulfill that obligation.

Commissioner Steve Weems was the sole dissenting vote on adding the court deputies. He said he had earlier promised to oppose adding any extra personnel until January and he would stick by that.

Before the final budget vote, Commissioner Tim Hutchins suggested the BOCC revisit the decision to give employees step and COLA increases at a cost of $2 million to cover any potential impact from COVID-19. He said alternatively they could give a one-time stipend.

Weems also suggested revisiting the tax rate cut, although later he said he wasn’t recommending it.

Commissioner Mike Hart urged keeping the rest of the budget intact. He said he always says, “I don’t live in fear. And, I still don’t.” He said if the future proves him wrong, he’ll admit the mistake. “I’ll have to adjust, and we will.”

Hayden noted in a memo to the BOCC: “Overall, the revenues that fund the budget increased by approximately $5.6 million, in comparison to the FY 2020 adopted General Fund Budget. $3.8 million of this increase is related to the Dominion payment in lieu of tax (PILOT) agreement. Continued slow, steady growth in Calvert County is expected to provide most of the remainder of the increase, $1.6 million in real property taxes and $1.3 in income taxes. The growth in taxes is partially offset by a decrease of $1 million in interest and dividends.”

“$4.1 million of the increased revenues will provide additional operating funding to the Board of Education. The other most notable increases include transfers (pay-go) to Capital Projects and Parks & Recreation.

“Funding towards education remains the primary focus of this Budget, at 45 percent of the General Fund Operating Budget and 24 percent of the six-year Capital Projects Budget. Education funding for operations is $134.7 million, which is $3.2 million above the state-mandated Maintenance of Effort (MOE) funding level.”

The final vote on the budget after adding the four special deputies and reducing the reserve was unanimous.

Tourism Director Leaves Visit St. Mary’s

By Guy Leonard
Staff Writer

Jason Aul, who has been the head of the county’s efforts to rebrand and enhance its tourism industry for the past two years, has parted ways with the non-profit, The County Times has learned.

“Beginning today [June 10] Visit St. Mary’s MD (VSSMMD) and Executive Director Jason Aul will end their relationship,” stated Visit St. Mary’s Board Chair Dr. Regina Faden. “Mr. Aul was the tourism agency’s first director and held the position for approximately two years. Under his leadership, a new identity was established for VSSMMD and progress was made on key strategic priorities.”

“The change in leadership will allow VSSMMD to refresh the tourism effort and to bring new energy toward goals and strategies contained in the Tourism and Hospitality Master Plan,” Faden continued.

“The Board will soon embark on a widespread effort to attract a new leader to VSSMMD. The recruitment process will allow for consideration of local, regional, and national candidates for the position.”

Last week the board of directors of Visit St. Mary’s released a statement saying that they were reviewing comments posted by Aul on his personal Facebook account saying that he did not respect supporters of President Trump.

The board stated that they took Aul’s comments seriously and that his opinion was not shared by the board.

His comments were open for public viewing on his Facebook page. “Let me be abundantly clear. If you are still a supporter of Donald Trump, I do not respect you.

I will continue to live my life as best as I can, love who I love, be friendly with whom I am friendly, and work diligently with all my colleagues and business partners. None of that will change,” Aul said in his social media post.

“However, if you still support Donald Trump, I do not respect you.” gayleonard@countytimes.net

Town Looks to Ride Out COVID-19 Impacts

By Guy Leonard
Staff Writer

Rebecca Sotheron, Leonardtown’s finance and budget officer, told the town council that the county’s low unemployment rate, coupled with continued residential growth in town, gave her confidence that the town could weather the impacts of COVID-19 better than much of the rest of the state.

Sotheron gave a monthly budget report to the town council at their June 8 meeting which showed that the tax revenue allotments the state gives out each quarter was 22 percent higher this May than the same time last year.

Sotheron said revenues coming from the state were not easily predictable because of losses due to COVID-19, but she believed the town was basically financially sound.

“I do think we’ll reach budget for fiscal 2020,” Sotheron said, noting the town was 92 percent through its budget year at the June 8 meeting. “And we may have a surplus for fiscal 2020.”

The county’s unemployment rate is now at 7.3 percent for May, according to state data, more than twice what it was just the month before.

But, it’s still the lowest unemployment rate in Maryland after the COVID-19 shutdown enacted by Gov. Larry Hogan in March.

“Not only do we have the lower unemployment rate, but we also have the benefit of growth,” Sotheron told the town council members. “Those two factors should give us a cushion.”

Each annual budget the town approves has capital construction projects included, Sotheron said, which could be delayed or cut to ensure that there would be enough money to provide basic operations and services to town residents if revenues dwindled more precipitously.

“We do have the funds for recurring expenses,” Sotheron said. “We’d just have to cut back on those capital items.”

She said it would take perhaps months to know the full extent to which COVID-19 would financially affect the state, county and town.

“Anyone trying to predict something is using a lot of assumptions,” Sotheron said. gayleonard@countytimes.net
Calvert State of Emergency Extended Declaration Helps Secure Funding

By Dick Myers
Editor

The Calvert County Board of County Commissioners (BOCC) has extended the local state of emergency for another 30 days until mid-July. The decision at the BOCC June 9 meeting is the third extension of the state of emergency since the original one on March 17. The last extension on May 14 caused quite a bit of confusion and forced the BOCC to issue a clarifying press release. That May 17 extension came at the same time that Governor Larry Hogan announced his Phase 1 reopening, the first lessening of restrictions for a state beginning to suffer from severe cabin fever. Calvert adopted the governor’s rollout, but some citizens thought the state of emergency reversed that. Not so, and Commissioner Buddy Hance quickly assured county residents, “This has no impact on the reopening” which is now into Phase 2. He noted the state of emergency was simply to allow the county to qualify for and receive state and federal funding.

For instance, at the same meeting, the county accepted $311,000 in federal CARES Act funding through a Community Development Block Grant. The monies will be used for “a traveling senior care nurse, housing and homeless assistance case manager, emergency quarantine shelter, cloud-based case management software, and emergency rental assistance,” according to Director of Community Resources Jennifer Moreland.

Moreland said the federal monies will be used to assist low- and middle-income individuals, the most vulnerable in the community to the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic.

In requesting the extension of the state of emergency, Director of Public Safety Jacqueline Vaughan told the BOCC, “COVID-19 is a respiratory disease that continues to spread easily from person to person and may result in serious illness or death.”

As to the pandemic’s fiscal impact on the county, she said, “The total fiscal impact of this crisis is unable to be determined at this time; however, to date, the county has committed approximately $1.5 million to protect, prevention, mitigation, response, and recovery efforts from the impacts of this health crisis. Our Department of Finance and Budget has established policies and procedures to track all costs related to the COVID-19 response and recovery from this ongoing health emergency.”

Gatton’s Barber Shop Coming Back from COVID-19 Shutdown

By Grace McCready
Special to The County Times

Gatton’s Barber Shop of Hollywood has been part of the St. Mary’s community for almost 90 years. John Gatton Sr.’s father opened the barbershop in 1933. Meanwhile, Gatton Sr.’s older brother worked there starting in the 1950s and his younger brother joined the business in the 1960s. Gatton Sr.’s son began working at the barbershop during the 1980s, while his daughter joined in the early 2000s.

Though Gatton Sr.’s first year in his father’s barbershop was 1959, that location was in Sandy Bottom in Hollywood. The current Hollywood location, which was built in 1969, served as an experiment of sorts for Gatton Sr.

That experiment had perhaps its most difficult test with the outbreak of the novel coronavirus. As for COVID-19’s impact on the barbershop, Gatton Sr. shared candidly that it truly hurt the business.

He said, “I’ve never lost that much time in my whole career...you have to set aside [money] for the rainy day, the rainy week, the rainy month.”

Closed for about eight weeks, Kimberly Gatton Sullivan, his daughter and part business owner with his son John Gatton Jr., mentioned that it was hard for her to be told not to work. She said that she’d never thought the barbershop and salon industry would be forcibly closed.

Though the barbershop stayed open for several weeks in March, Gatton Jr. noticed a decline in business. “...it was absolutely 100 percent related to the COVID situation,” he said.

The relationships that Gatton’s Barber Shop has with other salons and barbershops in St. Mary’s County helped the business thrive during the shutdown. Gatton Jr. said, “Just because we’re in the same business doesn’t mean that we are enemies, because that’s not the case...we were all communicat- ing quite a bit either by telephone or through our own Facebook page that we had created.”

Since Gatton’s Barber Shop reopened on May 18, there have been several restrictions in place, such as having customers make appointments and frequently cleaning the chairs. The first week of the barbershop’s reopening, Gatton Sr. said they were “really slammed.”

Sullivan said, “I mean, we still cleaned everything [before COVID-19], but it’s just...a little bit more entailed now.” She added that the shop has had a steadier flow of business recently.

One of the barbershop’s biggest challenges has been switching from its previous walk-in-only format to its current appointment-only format. Sullivan said, “...most of our customers are used to us being a walk-in facil- ity, and now they’re having to call to make an appointment.”

Gatton Jr. said he misses the conversations that came from random interactions of cus- tomers gathered in the shop. However, he did say, “...while the appointment process was not something that we embraced, we readily admit that it helped us to manage the flow of people tremendously, particularly that first week because, as I said, it was tremendously busy.” He said his colleagues in St. Mary’s County had expressed a similar opinion.

Not only does the Gatton family have close relationships with each other and with their colleagues, but they also have strong relations- ships with their customers.

Gatton Sr. noted, “We try to cater to them and meet their needs...If somebody gets sick and can’t get out, we go to the house and cut their hair. If they’re in the hospital, sick, we go to the hospital. If they’re in a hospice home, we do it for our customers...even if one of our customers passes away and needed a haircut, we’d go the funeral home and take care of it.”

So, we try to care of them from beginning to ending.”

Calvert Murder Suspect Found Driving Victim’s Car

Thanks to an alert citizen who spotted the stolen vehicle, the suspect wanted in connection with the murder of a woman found dead June 8 in her Prince Frederick home was arrested early this morning by a Maryland state trooper and a Calvert County deputy sheriff.

The suspect is identified as David H. Johnson, 48, who had been recently living in Prince Frederick. He is charged on an arrest warrant this morning with first-degree murder, second-degree murder, home invasion, first- and second-degree assault, burglary and theft. Additional charges are pending. He is being processed at the Maryland State Police Prince Frederick Barrack and will be taken to the county central booking center for an initial appearance before a court commissioner.

Shortly before 10:30 a.m. June 8, state troopers from the Prince Frederick Barrack responded to the home of Rose M. Long, 71, of the 200-block of Stafford Road after a relative found suspicious circumstances at the home. Troopers found the victim deceased in the home. The home was in disarray and troopers found evidence of an assault.

State Police investigators from the Homicide Unit and the Criminal Enforcement Division, assisted by crime scene technicians and troopers from the Prince Frederick Barrack, worked through the day and night yesterday presenting the scene, collecting evidence and canvassing the neighborhood for anyone who could provide information about a suspect.

During the night, investigators were able to develop information and evidence that identified the suspect as Johnson. Investigators obtained an arrest warrant for Johnson and a search was initiated for him. A lookout for the victim’s vehicle, which was missing from her home, had been issued last night.

Shortly before 5:00 a.m. today, a motorist spotted the victim’s vehicle and called police. A Prince Frederick Barrack trooper and a Calvert County deputy sheriff located and stopped the car on Rt. 4 at Skinners Turn Road in Owings. The driver, identified as Johnson, got out of the car and was arrested without incident.

Investigators believe Johnson had been staying at a home in the victim’s neighborhood during the past few months. Prior to that, they believe he was living in Washington, D.C.

A motive for this crime has not been established at this time. An autopsy is expected to be conducted today on the victim’s body.

The investigation is continuing.

Teen Court Program Goes Virtual

The St. Mary’s County Department of Aging & Human Services Teen Court program has transitioned to a virtual system. The first virtual session was held on Tuesday, June 2, 2020.

According to Global Youth Justice, Inc., St. Mary’s County Teen Court is now one of only 25 programs throughout the country hosting virtual Teen Court sessions.

Teen Court is a juvenile justice diversion program offering first-time misdemeanor offenders, ages 11-17 and first-time traffic offenders under the age of 18, the opportunity to accept accountability for their minor crimes without having to incur a permanent criminal record or traffic court fines and points. Teen Court is a voluntary program that allows juvenile offenders to be judged by a jury of their peers.

The 90-day processing requirement for juvenile cases was not changed when the courts closed in Maryland due to the COVID-19 emergency, said Gregory Jones, Teen Court Coordinator with the St. Mary’s County Department of Aging & Human Services Human Services Division. When the courts closed, Jones had cases already scheduled for hearings and others waiting to be processed. Without an effective alternative the focus was to find a way to forward them to the Maryland Department of Juvenile Services for formal processing, where the offenders would potentially get a juvenile criminal record, the very thing Teen Court is designed to prevent.

“[We] would be very remiss if we didn’t do absolutely everything we can to give these children the second chance that Teen Court provides,” Jones said.

With this in mind, Jones began researching the few virtual programs that existed at that time, finding ones in Texas and Arizona that could potentially be reworked to suit the needs of the St. Mary’s County program. Security, confidentiality, ease of access and the ability to electronically move the offender and their parents during jury deliberations to a waiting area like the 1-321.

In addition to handling the actual court hearings virtually, Jones can conduct the intake interviews for new cases as well as the exit interviews following the completion of the hearing. He is able to get necessary paperwork and contracts and forward them to the parents via email. The development of these procedures not only facilitates addressing the cases still pending but allows for additional ones to be accepted until in-person court sessions can safely resume.

Michelle Lowe, Teen Court Bailiff and jury monitor, is pleased to be involved in the virtual Teen Court and believes it sends a strong message to both the volunteers and the teens with cases being heard.

“Moving online makes them realize the importance of the program in general; moving online shows that we believe it to be an important part of what we do,” Lowe said.

While work was being done on the technical aspects of the virtual court session, Jones had to rewrite procedures designed for the in-person court sessions to operate in the virtual courtroom. He scheduled test sessions with the Teen Court adult, teen and Community Judge volunteers to walk through the evolving procedures, refine the technical operation of the virtual program and validate the operating procedures in a realistic setting.

“Credit truly goes to all the Teen Court volunteers who make this program happen. It still never ceases to amaze me the insight, dedication, and fairness of our teen volunteers. They are absolutely phenomenal,” Jones said.

Teen Court hearings are normally held the second and fourth Monday of each month, but they are currently being held more frequently to allow them to get necessary paperwork that built up while the virtual program was being developed and to accommodate the longer amount of time virtual hearings take.

Teen Court utilizes the services of teen volunteers ages 11 - 17 as jurors and adult volunteers who serve as community judges, jury monitors, bailiffs and administrative aids.

“There is no one other than the seniors and about teens, this really falls up the alley of the volunteers. We’re dependent upon our young people to make this program work and they’ve been pulling us along,” said Charlottes Woodley, Teen Court Community Judge, of the virtual program. She has been with the program for over eight years.

“Overall, [virtual Teen Court] has been very successful,” said Katie O’Toole, a Teen Court juror who has been with the program for a year. Aside from some technical difficulties initially, the sanctions and order of procedures have been smooth, she said.

Press Release from St. Mary’s County government.
Real-Estate Industry Adjusts to Pandemic

By Bri Corley
Contributing Writer

When one thinks about the coronavirus pandemic and its impact on businesses, most tend to think of restaurants, stores, and the like. However, one field that has been impacted by both the initial outbreak and adjusting to reopening has been real estate. From complex guidelines to an unexpected market increase, the real estate business in Southern Maryland has had to jump through hoops in order to provide prospective buyers with their dream home.

Dave Spigler of Lusby has been selling homes in St. Mary’s and Calvert County for nearly 29 years. According to Spigler, guidelines for real estate agents can change due to any sort of legal change on any level of government. However, much like every other aspect of life, the unprecedented nature of coronavirus led to a dramatic change in their system.

“In my time in this business, I have not experienced such rapid, dramatic changes in the way we go about our daily work,” said Spigler. “I have witnessed change throughout my real estate career, mostly caused by changes in laws at both the federal, state, and county levels.”

One of the main adjustments the real estate industry had to embrace is how they conduct house tours. Guidelines have been set that limit the number of people on a tour and control what everyone must do in order to risk as much contamination as possible.

Spigler says, “Appointments are spread out to ensure no overlap. Our sellers need to have a logbook for all buyers who enter their home. Hand sanitizer must be available at the front door. The buyers must wear masks and need to remove their shoes as they enter the premises. They are asked not to touch anything in the houses other than doors. Sellers most often leave when buyers are scheduled, and there have been extreme cases where sellers take their homes off the market as they don’t want to take any chances with strangers walking through their places. The Maryland Association of Realtors and the Southern Maryland Association of Realtors as well have produced forms for all clients to sign that make them aware of these new protocols.”

However, these changes haven’t scared off buyers. Spigler believes the increase, which is “well ahead of last year’s figures,” is due to a combination of factors. One is that quarantine with family may have brought to light any issues with space and show the need for an upgrade. It also may have something to do with houses receiving offers so quickly, which would encourage others to see the possible worth of their home. The seller’s market is also at a low, which gives sellers an advantage to get their desired price.

“But the biggest and truest reason for this unexpected activity,” Spigler said, “is because mortgage interest rates are at an all-time low and banks are lowering credit score requirements to allow younger people the ability to purchase a home. With these really low-interest rates, buyers can now afford to purchase much larger homes than they might have considered just six to nine months ago.”

St. Mary’s Unemployment Rate Celebrated

By Guy Leonard
Staff Writer

Maryland has been hit hard economically by the COVID-19 shutdowns and most counties have a double-digit unemployment rate; but there is one doing better than the rest, and that is St. Mary’s County.

The state’s latest figures show St. Mary’s County has a 7.3 percent unemployment rate; neighboring Calvert County has an 8.3 percent unemployment rate.

Worcester County, on the Eastern Shore, has a 22.8 percent jobless rate. Local officials say that the county’s largest economic engine, Patuxent River Naval Air Station, had much to do with local job security.

But even with that the April rate is more than twice that of March, which was just 3.1 percent.

Calvert’s unemployment rate in March was just 2.8 percent before the COVID-19 shutdown.

The latest statistics show that there are now 3,915 people claiming they are unemployed in St. Mary’s, in Calvert, 3,954 report being unemployed.

Commissioner Eric Colvin said the county’s position was enviable compared to the rest of the state.

“It’s still up,” Colvin said of the jobless rate. “It’s unfortunate but we’re doing better than the rest of the state.”

Colvin said he first learned of the rankings last week at a meeting sanctioned by the Maryland Association of Counties (MaCO).

The MaCO presenters also said that the job losses in Maryland from the two years of the Great Recession from 2008 were equalized by the job losses sustained during the COVID-19 shutdown over just two months, said Colvin.

“The projection is anywhere from two years to three-and-a-half years for a full recovery,” Colvin said. “Hopefully we can get through this and only see minimal impacts.

“We’ll see.”

The overall unemployment rate for Maryland is 10.1 percent; more than 306,000 Marylanders are without jobs. guyleonard@countytimes.net

Churches of Southern Maryland: Pt.2: First Saints Community Church

until later. Starting at Esperanza Middle School, this campus ended up in a permanent home that was owned by the church. The name “First Saints Community Church” combines the original names of the churches. Owens added, “And, like, the perpetual challenge of this is the tension of being four distinct campuses with each with their own campus life and history and culture but also operating and seeing ourselves as one church. And so that always creates a good tension that we’re always trying to live into.”

Regarding leadership roles at the church, Owens explained, “So I’m lead pastor of First Saints. I’m the primary campus pastor of the Leonardtown campus, and then Reverend Trish Watson is the primary campus pastor for Callaway. And then Reverend Cindy Caldwell is the primary campus pastor for the St. George Island and Ridge campus.”

Owens started his relationship with Christ as an 18-year-old. He was actually interested in being an English teacher, earning his bachelor’s degree from Towson University He laughed, “It’s funny I ended up being a teacher anyway in a lot of ways.”

After that, he earned his Master of Divinity from Wesley Theological Seminary, pastored at Hollywood United Methodist Church for a few years and was appointed to First Saints Community Church in 2019. He is married and has three children.

When the coronavirus hit, the leaders of First Saints Community Church confronted the obstacles. Owens stated, “We had to completely reinvent our ministry, which is significant and large. [We had to] completely reinvent it to be all online or virtual, and so we were working ourselves to the bone for a couple of weeks, just trying to get that all figured out.”

Owens expressed plans for a virtual Vacation Bible School, though it’s normally done at two or three church campuses. He mentioned, “And then we’re also finding that we’re doing more work in equipping parents who have had their kids at home.”

The youth ministry at First Saints Community Church, called Harbor Youth, is “one of the best, if not the best, youth ministry in St. Mary’s County,” claimed Owens. He explained that the youth were able to serve at the Leonardtown campus’ food distribution while taking proper safety precautions. More service opportunities are likely in store for them.

With two food pantries, one at the Leonardtown campus and one at the Ridge campus, First Saints Community Church is ready to assist the community. Owens claimed their Loaves and Fishes’ food distribution in Leonardtown never shut down, even with COVID-19’s spread. Also, Owens said Zoom has made small group meetings, Bible studies and communion possible, though small groups may have in-person outdoor meetings soon.

Another way the church has used the coronavirus to expand its impact is through American Sign Language (ASL) interpretation. Jody Cacko, the church’s ASL interpreter, had mainly been interpreting for one man at the church’s Leonardtown campus. However, Owens stated, “So now we are one of the only online services I know of that are that is fully accessible to the deaf and hard of hearing.”

Incorporating both traditional worship and contemporary worship, a single service is livestreamed for all campuses of First Saints Community Church. Owens shared, “But very quickly, we found that we now have a much, much wider worshipping community that is literally all over the world now.”

Owens believes the pandemic has impacted the church’s decision to expand to other campuses, perhaps anywhere in the world. “So one of the strategies we’re thinking about is something called micro-campuses, where we’re kind of taking the best of our campus mentality and the house church model that Callaway represents and trying to get people to gather in smaller groups,” he explained.

Though the campuses each offered a format of outdoor worship starting May 31, Owens didn’t sugarcoat his thoughts about resuming worship indoors. “We have no compunction to just fling wide the doors of the church to say that we’re open again.” However, he made a point to say, “We have never been closed. Period. We have never closed. We have been open the entire time. And what I mean by ‘open’ is we are still the church in our community. And the doors of what we do and offer...are wider now than they’ve ever been.”

Project Graduation Money Going Towards Student Computers

By Guy Leonard
Staff Writer

Money that would have been spent on Project Graduation, which was cancelled due to COVID-19 fears, will now go towards purchasing laptop computers for St. Mary’s public school students so they can continue distance learning.

Deputy State’s Attorney Jaymi Sterling told the Commissioners of St. Mary’s County at their June 9 meeting that the office had just over $100,000 in revenue in a revolving fund to buy 315 computers.

While most St. Mary’s students have access to on-line learning platforms, a small number do not and have had to work from paper packets specially prepared and distributed to them to complete their schoolwork over the past several weeks.

“It’s a 36-year-old program,” Sterling said. “This, unfortunately is the first time we won’t be holding this event since 1984.”

Project Graduation was held annually at the Patuxent River Naval Air Station drill hall and provided for every senior in the county a drug-and-alcohol free environment to have one last celebration with their classmates.

It had become something of a ritual in St. Mary’s.

Sterling said the State’s Attorney’s Office wanted to do something positive with the money.

“This is a phenomenal use of this money,” said Commissioner Eric Colvin, who praised Sterling and the state’s attorney’s office, which could have chosen to keep the money to be used next year to sponsor the event.

The commissioners also voted Tuesday to approve state funding in the amount of $200,000 to help complete the so-called “middle mile” project of extending rural broadband connections to farther flung areas of the county that have to find alternative means of internet access which are often less reliable.

Director of Information Technology Bob Kelly said the funding will complete the projects in 13 out of 15 areas identified as needful of the service here.

Completing the “middle mile” will eventually pave the way to finish the “final mile” commissioners said of connectivity to rural homes.

Commissioner Todd Morgan said completing this project will bring the county one step closer to providing for many employees on Patuxent River Naval Air Station to continue the popular COVID-19 practice of teleworking which has grown swiftly in just months.

“There are lots of people who are never going back on base,” Morgan said. “The employees have to find ways to hook up to broadband and cable.

“The broadband here is for everybody’s purposes,” Morgan said. “Working from home is here to stay.”

Tidewater Dental: From ‘A Good Place to Start a Practice’ to the Area’s Largest and Adjusting to the Pandemic

By Dick Myers

Editor’s Note: It was in early March that Maryland has proposed dentistry open to all elective procedures, Tidewater Dental is following more strict guidelines as directed by the CDC and the Maryland Department of Health. We are seeing limited hygiene patients, emergencies, and restorative care at this time. We are following all PPE guidance by the American Dental Association, American Dental Hygiene Association, the Center for Disease Control, and the Maryland Department of Health.

All patients are being screened for COVID-19 related symptoms and high-risk scenarios before determining if a visit is recommended. This includes temperature check, pulse oxygenation level check, and a short questionnaire. Our appointments are spread out to accommodate social distancing and proper sterilization between patients. We have invested in dental systems and training that reduce aerosols generated from procedures getting into the ambient workspace. We have also followed all orders by Governor Hogan including the required posted signage attesting to our compliance with state regulations.

Tomcsik said, “If you are in a high-risk group for COVID-19, all routine dental visits should be avoided at this time. Many procedures in dentistry cause aerosols to be thrown from the patients’ mouths that can remain airborne much longer than the aerosols produced from a sneeze, cough or talking and eating. To combat this heightened risk, we are doing everything we can to reduce the risk of infection. While, as of this writing, there have been no known cases of COVID-19 traced back to a dental practice, it is important to weigh the risk of contracting COVID-19 versus the risk of postponing your dental care. For guidance on making an informed decision, contact Tidewater Dental at any of our six locations.”

Tomcsik was originally from New Jersey but came to the area to attend St. Mary’s College. After graduation he worked for a marketing firm in New York. He said, “I helped bring Ice Breaker Mints to fruition. I was getting tired of the constant traveling into the city every day. And so, I decided to go back to school to get my Master’s in Education.” While doing that he started helping Dr. Cooper during the summer with marketing. “And after two summers of that, he said, ‘Why don’t you come on full time?’ That was a key pivot for both men, because Dr. Cooper admitted that sometimes professionals, like dentists, aren’t always the best businessmen.

“When you do want to expand a business, whether it be a medical business or any business, you have to have the right people in the right seats on the bus,” Dr. Cooper related. “I was the right person on the seat of the bus from a clinical perspective. Growing a clinical practice from the business perspective, I was not. I did not have the expertise nor the amount of time because you can only really devote so much time to doing a business when you’ve got to be taking care of patients. So, when I decided that we were going to make our business a little bit bigger, I had to bring people on board to help me. And that’s where Jeff came in.”

There wasn’t one “aha” moment that led to the decision to expand. It was more a process. He started his practice in St. Mary’s Square and was there for 17 years. He decided he wanted his own building and bought his current one from Lewie Aldridge in what used to be a racquetball court. “I wanted to expand. I needed more room. So, 2001 was basically when I started the expansion project. Jeff would come onboard shortly after that.”

He not only needed people, he needed infrastructure. “It’s hard to do a business without the proper infrastructure, whether it be equipment or people.” He added, “We just had one facility until 2010. So, we’ve grown from one facility to seven facilities in that 10 years.”

Those facilities are in Lexington Park, Prince Frederick, Solomons, Lusby, Dunkirk, Glenarden and Charlotte Hall. Their Lusby office was destroyed by fire last year and they are in the process of re-opening at a new location.

Tomcsik said of that growth, “I think one of the biggest things was, from my perspective, when Dr. Cooper brought me in, he gave me a lot of free rein to educate myself on the industry itself, going to courses and reading journals and things like that. And then we would have Tuesday evening meetings and we would discuss things that we can do to elevate the business, to change the business, to differentiate from the competition.”

When asked how he arrived at where he is today, he said, “I wanted to have quality doctors and health care professionals working on me. So, we recruited the top people that we could get our hands on to help us out, hygienists, assistant managers. It’s hard to do a business without the right people in the right seats on the bus.”

“But also, I want convenient hours. So, from the time we’ve started, we’ve seen patients from 7 a.m. until 6 p.m. and through the week. You won’t find many other practices that do that. In fact, I would challenge you to find any that have those kinds of hours.”

Dr. Cooper added, “Not having anybody wait when they come into the office. Sometimes it happens, but for the most part we pride ourselves on it.” He added, “We schedule so we’re not wasting their time. Things that you would like as a patient, we took it to heart. All of our rooms in all of our offices have TVs on the ceiling and remote-control headphones, so that you can kind of tune everybody out.”

He also explained, “We do what we call CAD Cam dentistry where we have cameras that can record what’s in your mouth and then make the dental prosthesis right away. So, we try to incorporate the best and the most modern technology.”

Dr. Cooper also said, “We utilize a water purification system that’s the highest quality purification in the marketplace. All of our dental units have this purified water in it and no one else in the area does this. And that helps, especially with people that have immune deficiency issues; it helps prevent certain things from happening.”

He said two of their offices have a unique machine that can make a crown in an hour. “These are six-figure units to purchase. So most dental offices will not buy one, but they provide a much better image for placing an implant or doing other more complicated than that.”

Those offices also have CAT Scan machines, unlike normal dental x-ray machines, that can “zero in on a particular spot and see the raw space.” It’s just really an exceptional tool for certain things.”

“That economy of scale allows us to be more efficient. Because we’re bigger we can afford to buy the better equipment. We can afford to negotiate with insurance companies. Because we’re a bigger group we can say, ‘We want you to give our patients a better deal because we literally take care of over 20,000 patients in this county alone.’ So, like any other business, when you’ve got more resources, you can put more resources into your business.”

There’s not only an investment in equipment. Tomcsik said they pay for the continuing education of all 14 of their associates. “That is not just unique locally but unique in the industry.”

One of Dr. Cooper’s associates is his own son Todd. “He’s been practicing for probably 11 years, and he worked with me for four or five years before he even went to dental school. That is a real edge for them. We know the business and he has taken up taking care of my patients for the most part.”

Dr. Cooper realizes being the biggest means they need to strive to be the best. “We also ad to adhere to a higher standard. So, we do.”

Tomcsik also gave me a tour of the offices. “I’ve been visiting offices of theirs for five years before he even went to dental school,” he said. “And so, I know how they have grown, what kind of equipment they have, things like that.”

It’s hard to do a business with the proper infrastructure, whether it be equipment or people.” He added, “We just had one facility until 2010. So, we’ve grown from one facility to seven facilities in that 10 years.”

Those facilities are in Lexington Park, Prince Frederick, Solomons, Lusby, Dunkirk, Glenarden and Charlotte Hall. Their Lusby office was destroyed by fire last year and they are in the process of re-opening at a new location.

Tomcsik said of that growth, “I think one of the biggest things was, from my perspec-

White, Keen Remain in School Board Lead

By Dick Myers
Editor

On June 10, the Calvert County Board of Elections was still counting ballots that were coming in by mail. A week after the June 2 election, the stream has fallen to a trickle. Counting will be closed on June 12.

Although the counting is still ongoing, it appears that the two candidates from the field of six who will face each other in November for the Commissioner District 2 seat on the Calvert County Board of Education are Antoine White and Dawn Keen.

On election day Keen was the leader in the race followed by White but the ballots that have come in by mail in the last week have flipped the order, with White in the lead by 78 votes, 4,336 versus 4,258 in the non-partisan race.

At the meeting of the School Board Lead White, Keen remain in the vote. Mille Miller, with 19.5 percent of the last few days of counting, was behind to appear able to catch up in the partisan race.

Although the school board race is non-partisan, the Calvert County GOP before the primary came out with an endorsement of Keen.

White, 49, of Prince Frederick, is a Calvert County native, raised in Adelina, and a Calvert High School graduate. He joined the U.S. Air Force and continued his education there as a civil engineer. He is now a mortgage broker with Universal Mortgage. He and his wife have a son in college and a daughter in 4th grade at Barstow Elementary.

Keen, 41, of Port Republic, is a product of county schools and graduated from Lynchburg College with a major in business administration and a minor in psychology. After spending several years in retail, she went to work with the U.S. Department of Agriculture, where she is a statistician.

Conceptual Site Plans Now Mandatory

By Dick Myers
Editor

After a two-week hiatus, the Calvert County Board of County Commissioners (BOCC) met on June 9 and took care of several lingering issues delayed by the coronavirus pandemic. They included finalizing a proposal that was first introduced a year ago. They gave unanimous approval to make Conceptual Site Plan (CSP) reviews mandatory instead of optional.

Planning staff believed the change would make it easier on developers because they would know earlier in the process what the planners wanted and would avoid having to make changes after large outlays of time and money. The flip side was the creation of a mandatory two-step process.

The development community was largely on board but there were concerns raised by three development community representatives at a Jan. 28 joint public hearing of the planning commission and BOCC.

Deputy Director of Planning Carolyn Sunderland told the BOCC at the June 9 meeting that a follow-up meeting with the three speakers along with planning and public works staff was held on Feb. 3 and some suggestions to streamline the process were made. She said, “Based on the February 3 meeting, staff proposed a new draft Site Plan Review process, requested in-house review and comments on February 12, 2020, and met in-house on February 24, 2020, to discuss responses.”

The pandemic slowed things for several months while the planning commission didn’t meet but they finally recommended approved of the revisions at their May 20 meeting.

Sunderland said the change would be budget neutral because “The mandatory CSP would require the same fee as the detailed site plan application, which is $400 for Category I applications and $100 for Category II applications.”

Land Preservation Task Force

The commissioners agreed to form a Land Preservation Advisory Task Force (LPATF). There is currently a board in place that deals with agricultural land preservation. Director of Planning and Zoning Mary Beth Cook said the new task force would deal with the preservation of all types of land.

Cook said if the new task force makes recommendations involving agricultural land, those recommendations would be forwarded to the ag board. She said a member of the agriculture board would sit on the new task force.

Commissioner Tim Hutchins said he envisioned the task force as being temporary, making a report within a year and then being disbanded.

According to a memo to the BOCC from Rural Planner Ronald Marney, “Existing efforts towards land preservation in Calvert County have resulted in the preservation of over 30,000 acres of land to date. The BOCC expressed a desire to augment the work of existing boards, commissions, etc., on preservation of land and quality of life in the county.”

Marney added, “The LPATF’s primary task shall be to recommend additional land preservation initiatives for the BOCC’s consideration. This will be completed by meeting monthly, providing an interim report, and completing a final report and recommendations to be provided to the BOCC on or before July 1, 2021. The LPATF members shall serve for 1-year unless the BOCC votes to extend the term.”

Land Donated for Veteran’s Housing

Following a May 19 public hearing, the BOCC agreed to accept the donation of a 15,000-square-foot parcel of land to construct a home for a needy veteran. The land donation will allow the Calvert Affordable Housing Alliance, Inc. to seek funding for construction monies.

CSM Holds 61st Spring Commencement
Virtual Graduation Watch Party Held

The College of Southern Maryland (CSM) celebrated 470 candidates for 462 associate degrees and 214 certificates during its 61st Spring Commencement Ceremony, held May 29. The 2020 graduating class boasts several unique characteristics, chief among them that they are the first CSM graduates to turn their tassels in a virtual ceremony shared on social media.

Of the students being celebrated during the online ceremony, 172 are from Charles County, 164 are from St. Mary’s County, 109 are from Calvert County and 25 are from outside of the region. Sixty-one percent of the graduates are women and 39% are men.

The majority of degrees, or 26.2 percent, were in the field of arts and sciences, nursing (13.2 percent), business administration (8%), and engineering (4.5 percent). General study transfers, business management, cybersecurity and alcohol and drug counseling were the primary certificates awarded.

The virtual ceremony drew more than 3,000 viewers; where normally about 1,200 people, including students, attend in person.

It was a rite of passage this year, marked by pre-recorded speeches, video salutes from professors, graduate Alexandra Grace Knudsen’s memorizing rendition of the national anthem, graduate photos and quotes, and a webpage filled with well-wishes from local, regional and state politicians. Facebook viewers users left nearly 750 comments and clicked their love, like and hug button more than 300 times.

‘Our World is in Good Hands’
“Thank you for being here this morning – online with the College of Southern Maryland family – to celebrate the amazing achievements of our candidates for graduation and for the first time in our history doing so in a virtual commencement ceremony,” began CSM President Dr. Maureen Murphy as she kicked off the ceremony for an 11 a.m. watch party on Facebook.

Calling the graduating class as “extraordinary,” Murphy told the viewers how the events of 2020 had “demonstrated with unequivocal force what it means to persevere.”

“This pandemic is like nothing any of us have ever experienced,” she said. “It is a frightening marathon, with no end in sight. For the last three months, you have stayed home and studied. You have volunteered in our communities. You have worked as first responders on the front lines helping to fight this virus. You have been the essential workforce that kept us all going.

“And some of you fell ill and many of you lost jobs,” she added. “Yet, you come before us today – as college completers ... And if the way that all of you, the Spring 2020 candidates for graduation, have handled yourselves through this year is any indicator, our world is in good hands. Your amazing, resilient and powerful hands.”

The only thing that changed was that I moved to a virtual environment,” she said. “I can honestly say that coming to CSM was the best decision I could have made for myself,” she said. “I had the opportunity to explore different interests, participate as an NJCAA dual-sport athlete, continue my passion for student government, meet a network of amazing and supportive individuals, and even graduate with two associate’s degrees debt-free. Opportunity is here, if you choose to take it. I believe that I have really made the most out of my two years spent at CSM.”

“I knew when I walked out of those doors, I had to work on me,” she said. After incarceration, Brown went on to marry, parent his children, brag about his grandchildren and have a successful 30-year career as a machinist for a box company before retiring in 2011.

“It was after I retired, that I realized something was tugging at me,” he said. “I remembered that as a child, I wanted to be a lawyer. I wish my mom was still alive to see me graduate from the National External Diploma Program first, and then from CSM. She always said, ‘You want to be a lawyer? Go do it!’ So, I did.”

Brown said that his words of wisdom for his fellow classmates is straightforward. “Do everything you can do, right,” he said. “And don’t let anyone or anything stop you from doing the right thing. Stay focused on a plan and don’t let nothing stand in your way of achieving it.”

Youngest Graduate Allison Perusse
Allison Perusse began her academic career with CSM when she was 15 and living in Lexington Park. As a homeschooler, she dual-enrolled at CSM and transitioned smoothly to a full-time student in 2018. At age 17, she earned the title of the youngest graduate at CSM’s 2020 Spring Commencement.

Perusse holds another point of distinction. She moved to Tampa, Florida, and was finishing all of her classes to attain her degree through distance learning when CSM moved to remote operations due to COVID-19.

“Three whole pandemic didn’t impact me at all academically because I had already moved to a virtual environment,” she said. “The only thing that changed was that I didn’t have to return to Maryland to take my Spanish final.”

While Perusse had great praise for her instructors, she said her best move at CSM was to join the Leonardtown Campus Student Association. “The professors at CSM are passionate, they really care,” she said. “Every single student association meeting was so student-oriented and student-focused. Looking back, I am so glad I was at CSM where I could learn more about myself, afford to change my major and get involved in college activities.”

Conversation Creates Understanding, Leads to Sustainable Action

To the Editor:

This is a time of crisis in our country. Not only are we experiencing a worldwide pandemic which is exposing serious inequities in our healthcare system, but we are once again witnessing racial injustice in our policing and justice systems. With the murder of yet another black man, George Floyd, we are confronted with the tragic toll of inequity in our society. It has led to protests, riots and fear. In spite of the unrest and uncertainty, this is a time for opportunity. It all starts with conversation—the opportunity to sit with one-another and share, honestly and deeply, the experience of our individual and collective lives. Dialogue is where understanding materializes, relationships form, and people are empowered to do the work that will contribute to justice for all.

The Big Conversation Partners for Dismantling Racism and Privilege (BC-DRaP) in Southern Maryland have worked to create a space where honest and open conversations can transpire between diverse community members. In previous Big Conversations we have examined the impact of racism and privilege in our individual lives and acknowledged the resultant systemic disparities such as in our public school systems. We have also looked at mass incarceration of African Americans in our justice system. We have offered workshops on bias. These conversations can lead to realization, acknowledgement and understanding of the realities of life in America in the 21st Century. Acknowledging institutional racism is the first step to dismantling it, and that is where the opportunity lies in ourselves and in our community. By connecting people, policy, and history, we can illuminate structural racism that permeates our institutions. We can begin to turn the pain and frustration of hundreds of years of oppression into a more just future for everyone. Conversations can lead to change in ourselves and our community. These and similar conversations over the past ten years have contributed to community awareness and concrete changes in policy.

The next communitywide Big Conversation, “Many Wounds to Heal: Health Care (In)Equity,” has been rescheduled for Sunday, September 13. It will address inequities in health care that results in worsening health and decreased life expectancy of African Americans and people of color. This program is supported in part by a grant from Maryland Humanities. In the coming weeks, look for other small group workshop opportunities offered by the BC-DRaP before the annual event in September.

The BC-DRaP is sponsored by Middleham and St. Peter’s Parish along with the following partners: All Saints Episcopal Church, Calvert County Public Schools, Calvert Library, Calvert Branch of NAACP, Charles County NAACP, Community Mediation Centers of Calvert and St. Mary’s Counties, Concerned Black Women of Calvert Co, Emmanuel SDA Church, Remnant Center of Excellence, Inc., St. Mary’s NAACP, St. Mary’s County Public Schools, and Patuxent Friends (Quaker) Meeting.

The Big Conversation Partnership encourages all of us to think broadly, listen actively, and pray boldly for equity and justice.

Letters to the Editor

Silence is not an option.

To the Editor:

By now we all saw the video of the murder of George Floyd, an African American, by a white policeman in Minneapolis. At times like this we’re compelled to make our voices of outrage heard. Silence is not an option. America is in crisis. Our country is in the grip of a worldwide pandemic, 40 million people are jobless, facing income insecurity and an uncertain future, and now our cities are convulsed with rage at yet another incident of racial injustice with fatal consequences.

After 400 years we’re still confronted on a regular basis with the news of black lives cut short by the violent criminal acts of white racists. And too many of these crimes are being committed by officers of the law who have betrayed their oath “to protect and to serve.”

History is a stern taskmaster. We know from the past that the crises we’re facing today could be a recipe for civil disorder and violence, the breakdown of social cohesion, democratic institutions, and the rule of law—and even a catalyst for revolution. In our country, rare and exceptional leaders have stepped forward at crucial moments like this to keep us on the path of unity and justice—even moving our society closer to the realization of our founding ideals and principles.

When I was a young man in the 1960’s I participated in the civil rights movement. During one demonstration organized by the SCLC in southern Georgia on February 22, 1969, I was walking next to an elderly black man when a jeering white mob spewed racial epithets at us from the roadside, raced cars through our line of march, and threw dead animals and even smashed beehives in our path. Suddenly my friend was overcome by the stress of this onslaught and collapsed on the street at my feet. I can still see his face, contorted with pain. In that time and place there was no police protection for a peaceful protest. The march organizers, knowing that no ambulance would ever answer their call, loaded my friend into the back of a station wagon and drove him to the hospital.

The Atlanta newspapers confirmed his death the next day. Racism had claimed another victim. His name was Willie J. Simmons. There are no monuments to him, but I will always remember his final moments. He was a casualty of the struggle for equal justice—a struggle that continues to this day.

In my youth, I had hoped this dark chapter of our history would end, but the murder of George Floyd proves that after another half century it has not ended.

In the months ahead, we will be choosing new leaders—a President, members of Congress, and other officials. This is an important election, not only because the current occupant of the White House is unfit for the office and needs to be replaced, but because leaders of the government of the United States have proven themselves to be incompetent, corrupt and unresponsive to the needs of all our people.

In this year’s election we need to make a personal commitment to choose leaders who are driven by the mission of service, not the selfish pursuit of money, power or celebrity. We need leaders of character and integrity, now more than ever. We need truth-tellers and truth-seekers. We need to elect workhorses, not showhorses. We need leaders who are ready to step up and tackle the nation’s legacy of racism, and eradicate it from our institutions, including law enforcement. It’s time for an age of reform in America.

In 1969 when I was a 19-year old college student, I could never have imagined that in 2020 we would still be living in a racially divided, separate and unequal nation of haves and have nots. Yet here we are. It’s up to each of us to do our duty as citizens to bring this chapter of our history to a close, and begin a new one.

The Four Sisters of Solomons
An Appreciation

By Dave Jacobs
Contributing Writer

Editor’s Note: If there was ever a time for a truly feel good story, full of sincere happiness with much love and devotion that it will warm your heart and make you smile, this is the one.

This is a story about four “gems,” as people who have come to know them refer to them. They go by the names “Sister Ruth,” and “Sister Peggy,” and “Sister Grace” and “Sister Paula,” the beloved Sisters of the Congregation of Divine Providence at Our Lady Star of the Sea Parish in Solomons. They are the latest of 60 nuns to serve the parish from the Provincial House in Melbourne, Kentucky.

Their rich legacy dates back to 1933 when Father Maurice Alexander built a church and created a schoolhouse in the basement to educate 31 young people of the parish. Many of these early pupils later witnessed several generations of their family receiving a parochial school education during the 86 years of the sisters’ affiliation with the parish.

Sister Ruth Parent, aka “Ruthie” to her sisters, is the oldest of the four. People who come in contact with her say she is a lot of fun to be with! “Little” Ruth entered the convent at the quite young age of 14 along with her best friend Midge. Growing up in Minnesota, she was taught by the Sisters of Divine Providence. She was impressed by how kind, helpful, and friendly they seemed. Her family lived close to their convent and they would often help clean the classroom and bring the sisters treats her mother made for them.

She recognized early on when the school year was over and the sisters returned to the Provincial House in Kentucky, she would feel their absence and greatly looked to their return to start the school year in late August.

After accepting her vows, Sister Ruth taught school for 50 years before coming to Solomons in 2010. During her time there she did part time teaching and took Communion to many of the homebound parishioners and to local retirement homes. She made many friends in the community and has been so impressed with the beauty of Solomons, she says that of all the schools and parishes and has been so impressed with the beauty of the area.

She recognized early on when the school year was over and the sisters returned to the Provincial House in Kentucky, she would feel their absence and greatly looked to their return to start the school year in late August. Yet another family joined the Providence at Our Lady Star of the Sea School more than 30 years ago! Obviously, becoming a Sister was not a strange idea to her or her family. She says the Lord always knew where she should be as proven by her many years in several varied positions.

During her career she has worked as a sacrament taking care of the many altars at the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington, DC. She served as a Food Service Director at the Theological College in Washington and at Rolland Park in Baltimore. She spent most of 30 years as an Activities Coordinator in nursing home settings. An interesting point she makes about her involvement in Solomons came from the sisters she lived with in Washington who would drive down to Solomons for the day and would come back and tell her it was the best place to be.

Sister Grace has spent three years in Solomons and has enjoyed the freedom of being able to volunteer her efforts without being tied to a regular work schedule. Again, her joy has been the people who she came to know while helping with the “SAFE NIGHTS” group in Calvert County to ensure the homeless had a warm place to stay on cold winter nights. She volunteered at the Lushby Senior Center and Anne Marie Gardens and still found time to become involved with many others in their efforts to take care of the needy of the area.

She enjoyed the many relationships she has had with folks who have helped open her eyes to a much larger world, even learning what it is like to be so close to the water! She grew smarter by taking classes to increase her knowledge of her faith and sharing her experiences with fellow classmates. Learning about the history of the county as well as Maryland was especially enlightening.

Finally, the fourth “gem” is Sister Paula. Gohs, a passionate, yet a serious, no nonsense sister somewhat reminiscent of a time when sisters could have the biggest smile on their face, but a real heavy hand should you get out of line. Sister Paula is the “Eveready Bunny” of Our Lady’s Convent. Seeming to be everywhere, doing everything, she always displays her faithful smile, but avoided doing x-rays with a passion. She immediately found that to be true! She says she has never been to a place where she was involved in so many activities. Sister Peggy said she is so very thankful for the friendship and the great sharing of the faith the people here have provided her.

The third “gem” is Sister Grace Schmersal. She comes from a long line of women who entered the convent; two of her great aunts became Sisters of Divine Providence and in fact her older sister Al- ice Marie served as a teacher and principal for Our Lady Star of the Sea School more than 30 years ago! Obviously, becoming a Sister was not a strange idea to her or her family. She says the Lord always knew where she should be as proven by her many years in several varied positions.

October of 2012. “This was a great experience” as other sisters told her “the people here are soooooo nice and it’s a really beautiful place!” She immediately found that to be true! She says she has never been to a place where she was involved in so many activities. Sister Peggy said she is so very thankful for the friendship and the great sharing of the faith the people here have provided her.

She made many friends in the community and has been so impressed with the beauty of the local people as well as the environment. She said that of all the schools and churches she has been involved in during her long career, Our Lady “rates five stars of the highest regards” One well known secret about Sister Ruth; she absolutely loves Key Lime pie! Upon retirement, she hopes to help out at the Provincial House and do light chores including driving the other sisters to their appointments and assisting in other ministries as needed.

Sister Margaret Jacobs, better known as “Sister Peggy” has been a member of the Sisters of Divine Providence for 57 years. Raised in Ohio as an only child, she went to a school where the sisters taught and became good friends with one who allowed her to help grade papers for her and just about anything else, she would need. She would talk at length to young Peggy about the order’s founder, Blessed John Martin Moye, and claims to have loved him based on the sister’s stories.

Following eighth grade she entered St. Anne’s and commenced her high school education in the convent as a 13-year-old “Aspirant.” While she didn’t really know what she wanted to do, she says “God knew and has been with me all the way.” Her community of nuns is a “Teaching Order” and she studied in college to become a teacher but was unsure if she would like this role. She thought she would like to get in medical work and with her friend Sister Renee, set out to study the sciences in hopes of working in a medical form of ministry. She took the exam and suddenly was approved to put on this annual fundraiser for the parish, working with the hospital, bringing communion to the homebound, and supporting the local “SMILE” organization. She also worked with a Calvert County deputy sheriff in his squad car with its siren blaring and lights flashing as he led this noisy entourage past the convent! The four sisters were sitting opposite Sister Paula, with her checks, was completely astounded to learn this was done in her honor! She stated she never experienced anything like this in her life and it touched her deep down in her heart that so many would respond to her with cards, balloons, posters, and gifts! And she was further surprised to receive a birthday card from Pope Francis himself smiling broadly with balloons in his hand as well.

When asked what she enjoys most about living in Solomons, she says “it’s the people, it’s the people, the people… and the totally magnificent sunsets and sunsets! Hawaii has nothing Solomons doesn’t have, except active volcanos, and who needs them!”

From Dave: These four dedicated women are an historic rock foundation for their parish, and they are woven tightly into the fabric of the community that appreciates them for all they do! As they leave for their return to their Provincial House in Kentucky, the community wishes them “Godspeed” and a safe journey! Most of all, your friends and neighbors here wish you a big “Thank You” for a job well done!!! You are loved!
A View From The BLEACHERS

This Feels Different

Bi-weekly status check: it has been 92 days since the NBA suspended its season and 36 days since schools closed. The NBA is targeting a July 31 return in an Orlando bubble; hopefully everyone stays healthy and a season is salvaged. If schools reopen on schedule later this summer, and families feel confident in this return to normalcy (as much as one can living with COVID-19), then we will be in a much better place.

We are not in a good place at present.

In the 12 years this column has appeared in this fine paper, no entries have generated as many responses as those covering Colin Kaepernick’s protest of racial injustice during the national anthem. Some feedback was positive. Much was snarky, often from out of state.

All were welcomed.

The disagreements with expressed opinions were rooted in the common interpretation of Kaepernick’s protest as anti-American and anti-military. Kaepernick denied his act was either, even switching from sitting on the bench during the anthem to kneeling, after thoughtful conversations with Nate Boyer, a former Green Beret.

But the die was cast for certain cross-sections of America – Kaepernick was ungrateful, didn’t appreciate his country, its military or his afforded opportunities.

Powerful forces enforced this narrative. In 2016, then presidential candidate Donald Trump suggested Kaeper- nick, “...try another country” and has gleefully criticized the former quarterback in the years since. The NFL first condemned Kaepernick’s actions, then eventually banned kneeling during the anthem. But it’s what the league did quietly – especially his employer – didn’t understand four years ago. But mostly what they did was to encourage the chaos to subside and planning a return to status quo.

Drew Brees issued an apology after regurgitating tired old criticisms of Kaepernick; he then sent a note challenging Trump to deeper reflection. Even Roger Goodell, the kingpin of Kaepernick’s silence and a political operative for the White House, admitted “We were wrong for not listening to NFL players earlier.” It was an unfashionably late course-correction, failed to mention Kaepernick by name and will be proven authentic only by action, but the NFL’s advocacy is significant.

What must Kaepernick be feeling now? Frustrated, no doubt, that more – especially his employer – didn’t understand four years ago. But mostly hopeful, I think, that the movement he envisioned and the change he desired might finally be underway.

Wanderings of an Aimless Mind

“German food, Mexican food, or both?”

I am really enjoying all the food trucks that have been setting up at our Country Lakes park/ ball field. We didn’t get to try a lot of them during these last two months, but this past Saturday I thought I have to try the Deutsch-Mex food truck. Interesting combination – I mean I am already a devoted Tequila Grill fan, so a German Mexican combination will be great too. The owner of Deutsch-Mex.com, Ruth Carmona-Murray and her husband Phillip, with inspiration from her mentor Master Chef Thomas Eckert from Hohenstein Germany, have created some delicious offerings.

I had a lovely phone conversation with Ruth and asked her how this combination came to be. Ruth, who is Mexican American, told me that she was married to a German man for 15 years and lived in Germany for a total of 23 years, so with encouragement from her Mother-in-law, Oma, she began to fuse the two food cultures together. She said their entire family is a strong military family which naturally brings lots of food choices. Her present husband, Phillip is right there with her in their food truck venture. Ruth also teaches languages, including German and Spanish and also teaches cooking classes with German, French, and Spanish foods at The College of Southern Maryland. She is one busy lady. I am trying to make her even busier by encouraging her to bottle and market her Pachuca sauce. (with jalapenos and cilantro) next. I want the first 10 bottles just for me.

Once at their food truck, I couldn’t decide if I wanted to try the burrito schnitzel or taco schnitzels, but, ended up with the Bavarian pork Schnitzel with seasoned fries and the Pachuca and spicy mustard dipping sauces and a Schnitzel meal with potato salad as well. Our last name is Oppermann, so I figured this would be great for my husband. When he came home hot and tired from pool work, he said he really wasn’t that hungry, but once he tried the first bite of the schnitzel and then their “out of this world” potato salad, that was all she wrote. Bye, bye schnitzel.

Ruth just told me they will be back in our neighborhood on the 30th – can’t wait. I am going to try the schnitzel burrito and the Mexi-Slaw (with jalapenos and cilantro) next. And I have to try their Three Milks cake along with the Horchata drink. I might have to get an order of the Spat ‘n cheese too made with spaetzle noodles….and LOTS of Pachuca sauce.

I called my sister-in-law Kathy in Utah after I had the meal, and she said that in many parts of Texas, including where she grew up, there are large German-immigrant populations that have blended their recipes with the local Mexican recipes over generations, so this is a very popular style of cooking there.

This is from The Texas Hill Country website: “Germans have one of the biggest influences on culture and Texas Hill Country cooking of those who came to the state. Today, sauerkraut, sausages, and potato salads area still frequently served at Hill Country events, though these may not be found as frequently in other parts of the state. It’s perhaps the German dish of wiener schnitzel that chicken fried steak comes from. Instead of using veal, as the traditional recipe does, Texans often substitute tougher cuts of beef, which when cut thinly, pounded, battered, and pan-fried become much more palatable.”

So, if you get a chance, try something different, lots of food trucks are hitting neighborhoods and business locations. The only problem I had with Deutsche-Mex was trying to stop eating from both meals before my husband came home.

We know that your daily life looks a little different these days. Perhaps you’re now teleworking from your kitchen table, learning how to homeschool your children, or finding new ways to socialize with friends and family from a distance. You may even be spending your money in new and surprising ways. These changes definitely make life interesting! Here’s one very positive difference: refinancing with Cedar Point could give your family a lower monthly mortgage payment.

Cedar Point consistently offers some of the lowest interest rates in Southern Maryland. When you refinance your mortgage, you are replacing your current mortgage with a new loan with new terms, which usually includes new rates. Depending on the terms of the new loan, refinancing could lower your monthly payment and lead to some serious savings on interest. That’s the credit union difference! This could free up some of your money for other things like groceries, online shopping, savings accounts, or entertainment for your kids who are stuck at home. Additional benefits of refinancing could also include the ability to lower your interest rate, extend or shorten your loan term, tap into equity, or change your loan type.

What’s even better? You don’t have to have an existing relationship with Cedar Point to take advantage of our low rates. You just need to live, work, worship, go to school in, or regularly conduct business in St. Mary’s, Calvert or Charles Counties. Government and/or military affiliation is not required to do business with Cedar Point. To learn more, call your local branch or visit www.cpfcu.com/membership.

At Cedar Point, we are committed to excellence in member service. Our Mortgage Services Department is here to help you with your refinancing needs. For additional information about your mortgage refinancing options, please contact our mortgage department. We look forward to serving you.
